

Craig Anderson, Volunteers of America

Craig has worked in the Prevention Field for nine years and has had the opportunity to work in a large spectrum of service areas including local communities, national organizations, colleges, correction facilities and schools. Throughout his work, he has been able to serve individuals from each age category across the lifespan. Most of his prevention work has included managing state and federal projects and programs. Before coming to Cornerstone Counseling Center at Volunteers of America he worked for

Weber Human Services where he managed the federal Strategic Prevention Frame Work project for that region of the state. Previous to that he worked on a local college campus in their Wellness Department as the Prevention Program Manager.

Craig's interest in prevention comes from his personal beliefs and values that we can reduce harmful behaviors and enhance our communities through proactive strategies. He appreciates all the research and evidence based models that have come out of this philosophy over the past several years. He truly believes that prevention plays a critical roll in the overall well being of our homes, schools, communities and state.

“Our priority in Prevention is to provide quality, evidence based strategies to children, youth and families to reduce risk factors such as, but not limited to, early initiation of substance abuse and problem behaviors, low commitment to school and poor family management.”
